TEACHING EXPERIENCE

- University of Michigan. Comm Studies 419. Seminar on Research Methods. An interdisciplinary course, co-taught with Amanda Lotz, in which students are introduced to a diverse array of methods of inquiry. Course focuses on drafting and re-drafting a research proposal so that at the end of the course they have a sophisticated understanding of knowledge about a given topic in communication studies, and can identify the means for moving that literature forward with empirical research. Social scientific and humanities based approaches are given equal weight.
- University of Michigan. Poli Sci 719/Comm Studies 830. Racial Politics in the U.S.. (To be taught in Winter 2011). Advanced graduate seminar exploring theories of racial prejudice, conflict, socio-economic polarization, racial priming, political behavior, opinion gaps, stereotyping, identity, and explicit and implicit attitudes. Substantive foci will include racial redistribution, immigration, terrorism, ethnic violence and ethnocentrism. Media processes and effects in the domain of race and ethnicity will also be discussed. Structural economic, institutional, sociological, and psychological approaches will be used.
- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 776. Media Theory Seminar in the Social Science Traditions. Graduate survey of social science approaches to the study of mass media processes and effects.

- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 833. Political Communication. Explores theories of news making, elite communication strategies, and effects of exposure to political communication. Employs concepts such as rationality, behavioral decision-making, heuristic processing, and implicit attitudes. Explanations of vote choice, participation, racial attitudes, and the role of emotions in information seeking and Internet use are discussed.
- University of Texas at Austin. Government 679HA. Honors Tutorial in Government. Coordinator of the honors program in 2008-2009. Oversaw the preparation of 20 honors theses.
- University of Texas at Austin. Government 370L. Mass Media and Political Behavior. Upper division course on the interaction between the press, politicians, and the public. Reviews the history of news, campaign institutions, and public opinion and political consequences. Typical enrollment: 90.
- University of Texas at Austin. Government 381s. Political Psychology. Graduate survey course in political psychology. Focuses on concepts of rationality, behavioral decision theory, heuristic processing, and implicit attitudes. Applications to the vote decision, racial attitude formation, and the role of emotions in political information seeking are made. Enrollment: 12.
- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 491,492. Undergraduate Honors Thesis Preparation. Coordinator of the honors program in 2005-2007, 2011-2012. Oversaw the preparation of 7-10 honors theses per year.
- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 102. Mass Media Processes and Effects. Required for Communication Studies Concentrators. Reviews individual psychological and sociological theories of media effects. Theories of persuasion, learning, and socialization via mass media are discussed. Typical enrollment: 270.
- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 211. Evaluating Information. Delivers skills necessary for the critical evaluation and presentation of arguments, based upon quantitative evidence. Introduces basic quantitative reasoning techniques, including sampling, measurement, and design. Required course. Typical enrollment: 270.
- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 485/Sociology 463. Mass Media and Public Opinion. Derives formation and change in mass opinion as a result of mass media structure and content. Theories of public opinion, including classical stimulus-response, personal influence, socialization/predispositional models, uses and gratifications, third person, spiral of silence, Response/Acceptance/Sampling theory, and others are surveyed. Students are expected to learn to be critical of the ways in which public opinion is measured, analyzed, and disseminated. Typical enrollment: 25.
- University of Michigan. Communication 781. Measurement in Communication Research. Graduate course on conceptualization and measurement of constructs frequently used by communications researchers. Includes survey measurement, conceptualization, reliability/validity, content analysis, unidimensional and multidimensional scaling, factor analysis, magnitude scaling, ANOVA and regression analysis. Typical enrollment: 10.

- University of Michigan. Communication 771. Mass Media and the Public. Graduate course on the relationship between media and the public, focusing on public opinion formation and change. Emphasis placed on political processes and effects, including political advertising and news coverage of campaigns. Typical enrollment: 10.
- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 484/Political Science 325. Mass Media and Political Behavior. Maps the relationship between news media and government historically and in the modern era. Specific emphasis on the changing nature of campaign coverage occasioned by the partisan reforms and political upheavals of the late 1960's and early 1970's. Typical enrollment: 90.
- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 469. Mass Media and Political Socialization. Discusses social scientific and qualitative/theoretical approaches to issues of political socialization processes, agents, and effects focusing particularly on mass media. Typical enrollment: 25.
- University of Michigan. Sociology 501, 512, 513. Sequence in Survey Methodology. Three-course sequence associated with the execution of the Detroit Area Study. In the first semester, students are given a substantive overview of the research goals for the current study, and begin to design the survey instrument. In the second semester, students are given instruction on survey techniques, including sampling, question wording, split-sampling, and data management. The third semester is dedicated to analyzing the survey results and writing up research findings. Typical enrollment: 15.
- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 474. Mass Communication and Identity. Focuses on the media's role in the socialization process and impact of group attitudes on public opinion and political behavior. Theories including social identity, reference group, symbolic racism, group conflict, social dominance, principled conservatism, and others are reviewed. The role of the media in each of these theories of groups is discussed. Students perform quantitative secondary analyses on a dataset of their choice to test some of the hypotheses discussed in class. Typical Enrollment: 25.
- University of Michigan. Political Science/Communication Studies 620. Politics and the Mass Media. Explores theories of news making, elite communication strategies, and attitudinal and behavioral effects of exposure to political communication. The impact of media on governance and representation is discussed. Emphasizes the American case, but several discussions incorporate comparative electoral settings. Typical Enrollment: 10.
